Going back to school

Going back to school can bring up a lot of different feelings. For some young people going back to school is exciting, the thought of seeing friends or getting back into a routine. For others going back can feel scary, the thought of new teachers or subjects, seeing friends or peers or being in a new environment.

Things to support your young person with when returning to school:

1. Being prepared – It can be helpful to encourage them to pack their school bag and get their uniform out the night before school, so that the morning is less rushed.
2. Getting a good night's sleep – Doing relaxing activities in the evening, such as having a bath, reading, listening to calming music and avoiding screen time for at least an hour before bed, can help your young person to feel more tired and fall asleep more easily. Setting a bedtime can support them in getting back into a good sleep routine and feel more rested.
3. Take it one day at a time – Remember it can take some time to get back into a routine. Lists can help to prioritise tasks and keep on top of homework.
4. Try to focus on the positives – Making a note of at least one thing that they liked or enjoyed about their day, every day, can boost their mood. This could be a small thing, such as making a joke with your friend or having something nice to eat for lunch.
5. Try to form a morning routine – A regular routine in the morning can help them to feel less rushed and reduce feelings of uncertainty. Try to set a morning alarm for the same time every day.

What to do if your child is finding change difficult:

- Help them to problem solve.
- Maintain hobbies, favourite family activities and routines to create a safety net if your child is struggling.
- Give them encouragement.
- Encourage them to open up by starting conversations about what they are interested in.
